Letter from the Producers

elcome to Gateway Playhouse's 49th Season! We are very excited about the shows we have put together for you this summer.

Gateway has spent a busy year since The Odd Couple closed in October 1998. First, we were called in by the Village of Patchague to advise them on the renovation of the Patchogue Theater. This was a tremendous challenge. The building had been erected in 1923 as a vaudeville house, renovated into a movie theater, and then stood derelict for some 15 years. Power had to be brought in, the roof reinforced to support the grid for lights and scenery, seats had to be purchased, sprinklers installed, the stage floor leveled - the list went on and on. After many long days of hard work it had a triumphant reopening in December and the first show to play there was our production of Nutcracker On Ice, a Christmas present to our patrons. We then brought Holiday Spectacular On Ice to the Patchague Theater, and we look forward to working in that theater again in the future.

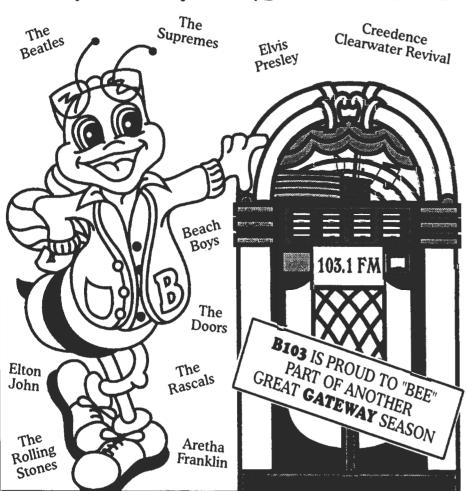

Since January we have been busy with Gateway Candlewood International, our touring production company. This year we had four shows on the road simultaneously, from January to May, which really stretched the resources of our staff. They rose to the occasion and made it seem effortless.

This summer we are assembling the largest cast ever to appear on the Gateway stage for Show Boat (June 23 - July 25). 1776 (August 25 - September 11) is fresh from its Broadway revival. A Chorus Line (July 28 - August 21) is our touring production which traveled throughout Southeast Asia this winter. But the most exciting show for us is Titanic (September 15 - October 2). Gateway Playhouse is the first theater in the country to get the rights to mount this show since it closed this Spring on Broadway.

We are committed to presenting you with the best entertainment on Long Island; it is both our challenge and our pleasure to try to make each season better than the one before. Thank you for supporting Gateway Playhouse, and enjoy the show!

Author's Note

The sinking of the Titanic in the early hours of April 15, 1912, remains the quintessential disaster of this century. A total of 1,517 souls—men, women and children—lost their lives (only 711 survived). The fact that the finest, largest, strongest ship in the world—called, in fact, the "unsinkable" ship—should have been lost during its maiden voyage is so incredible that, had it not actually happened, no author would have dared to contrive it.

But the catastrophe had social ramifications that went far beyond that night's events. For the first time since the beginning of the industrial revolution early in the 19th Century, bigger, faster and stronger did not prove automatically to be better. Suddenly the very essence of "progress" had to be questioned; might the advancement of technology not always be progress?

Nor was this the only question arising from the disaster. The accommodations of the ship, divided into 1st, 2nd and 3rd Classes, mirrored almost exactly the class structure (upper, middle and lower) of the English-speaking world. But when the wide discrepancy between the number of survivors from each of the ship's classes was revealed—all but two of the women in 1st Class were saved while 155 women and children from 2nd and 3rd (mostly 3rd) drowned—there was a new, long-overdue scrutiny of the prevailing social system and its values.

It is not an exaggeration to state that the 19th Century, with its social strictures, its extravagant codes of honor and sacrifice, and its unswerving belief that God favored the rich, ended that night.

Mindy Cooper and Joseph Kolinski

Associate director and choreographer Mindy Cooper and Joseph Kolinski (Captain Smith) had Titanic in common before coming to Gateway Playhouse; both had acted in the Broadway show throughout its entire run, and both are thrilled to be bringing it to life again in the first regional production and as the first musical staged at Patchoque Theater, "I called Mindy over the summer to play golf," said Kolinski, "and when she found out I was available, she told me she was doing the show at Gateway and was I interested? Of course I was!"

Cooper's background is in dance, "I left North Carolina School of the Arts to join a ballet company, and when eventually I was in New York and the company I was working for was closing, I decided to take the next step. I had been telling stories with my body, I wanted to tell stories with my voice, too," she said, "I was in the revival of Chicago, when I was offered an audition for Titanic and I said no." Cooper then found out the Titanic choreographer was a friend who wanted to create a dance specialty on her. "Brand new $12 million musicals don't come along very often, and I realized I wanted to create something new from the ground up. Everyone thought I was a lunatic for leaving a big hit to do this, Cooper said.

Kolinski came to acting late. "I didn't go to college for a few years because I didn't know what I wanted to do," he said. "I had acted only for fun when the University of Detroit came to the flower shop where I was working and offered me a scholarship based on seeing me in community theater," Kolinski said. After college he did summer stock in Colorado Springs where he met the woman who would become his first wife, which brought him to New York. His first big break came about two years later, in a Broadway revival of Brigadoon, "And when the director said I had the part, I went crazy right there on the spot!"Kolinski remembered. From Brigadoon, he did three more Broadway shows all flops! "You begin to think, am I cursed?" Kolinski laughed. After a short stint at the end of the run of Sunday In The Park With George he got the part of Fieully in Les Miserables. "That was the greatest rehearsal process I've ever been through, and it was also like the beginning of a new life for me," he said. He left the show eventually to work on Time And Again, a new musical based on Jack Finney's book, which is still being reworked for a possible future Broadway run. And then he started hearing about Titanic, in which he eventually played Benjamin Guagenheim.

Mindy Cooper

Joseph Kolinski

One of Guggenheim's numbers, a quartet which had made director Richard Jones want to do the show in the first place, was eventually cut from the show, a disappointment to Kolinski, although he said, "You have to accept those kinds of things are necessary, the show has to run!" When the show was in previews and early performances the set was troublesome and critics hated the show, leading Kolinski to think he might soon be auditioning again. But the producers believed in the show, which was eventually nominated for and won five Tony Awards. Cooper loved the creative process involved in Titanic, and was shocked when the show was not an Instant hit. "We knew it was heartwrenching and true and told in a beautiful way. Then there was a groundswell of people who began supporting it, like Rosie O'Donnell. That night at the Tony Awards was one of the most exciting of my life. I think we screamed for 24 hours!" said Cooper, who as dance captain, staged Titanic's Tony Awards number.

Cooper had taken a leave of absence from Broadway to put out the national tour of Titanic, then was approached by Gateway producer Paul Allan at the next to last show on Broadway, "He said, 'I'm going to be calling you, we are going to do Titanic this summer. And you'll have two weeks rehearsal," And I said no! It can't be done!" Cooper said, "B ut this is a great cast, hand-picked, and it is wonderful." Director David Armstrong and Cooper went through the show with a fine tooth comb to cut from 36 actors to 27, "We are asking the actors to double more rhan we did for Broadway or the tour company," said Cooper. "We tried to find "rhymes" where the hearts of the characters are the same. David has been great at that, and I think he and I make a great team because I am mired in how it has always been done and he has a fresh view."

Kolinski loves his career choice, " wouldn't trade places with anybody." he said. He is now married to an actress/choreographer and lives in Manhattan with her and their daughter. so he is grateful that he is mostly able to work locally. Cooper is enjoying exploring directing, while continuing to perform. Her husband, who runs a dance company, is a Titanic history buff. "The day he moved in, he had his clothes and all his Titanic books!" she laughed.

n 1962, the Gateway Playhouse's Main Stage theater was built by Harry Pomeran Land his son David, who recognized that their small theater business was expanding out of the Barn Theater. "We had begun putting on musicals," remembers Pomeran's daughter, Ruth Allan, "like Flower Drum Song, The Boyfriend and Li'l Abner and a lot more people began coming to the theater, so we decided to enlarge the premises and build a new theater to accommodate them, since we could not expand the barn. The large theater is built where the cow yard used to be." The interior of the theater was designed to match the rustic look, "it fit right in with the decor, with the laminated beams," said Ruth.

Today, Gateway is expanding again, again in reaction to audience needs, by managing the Patchague Theater for the Performing Arts in addition to producing shows at the Bellport location. Audiences are now demanding a variety of entertainment choices and Gateway plans to provide them. Producer Paul Allan, Pomeran's grandson, finds it easy to draw parallels between 1999 and 1962. "When my grandfather and Uncle David wanted to make a theater, they went to the Village fathers and asked permission to build a 500 seat theater. Based on the complaints of a few neighbors he was permitted to use it only six months of the year. In order to make Gateway viable for the future. we need to operate more than six months. Being in a residential area, the Bellport theater was not permitted to take up a large footprint or be too high, so Allan and his partner John Hodge have been occasionally frustrated by insufficient fly space and wina space. "The Patchoque theater is more appropriate for bringing in touring shows that need a larger space, where we need to sell a larger number of tickets to afford to bring in the show. Ideally, if we could operate 12 months of the year, we want to do our summer season in Bellport and also run shows there in the winter that are not on the scale for Patchoque. We could not book a concert in the 500 seat theater in Bellport where the performer is getting a $30,000 fee, we'd have to sell the tickets for $200 a piece," Allan explained

Since Gateway is only managing the Patchogue Theater, the Village is responsible for the building costs, unlike in 1962 when the cost was borne by Pomeran. The school was operating at the same time, and the tuitions helped defray part of the building cost although money was still tight since the hotel business was winding down at the same time. An arson fire had destroyed the ballroom of the hotel the May before, and dorms had to be quickly put up to house the students comina in a month later. The construction of the Main Stage began later that year, "It was a tough year," said Ruth.

The first show at Gateway Playhouse was Gypsy, and the actress playing Mama Rose became ill. "We didn't have understudies in those days and although someone was covering her, she had not really learned it. So she came into the show and actually did the lead holding a book through some of it! But it went on, and it was a good show.

Shows like Gypsy, My Fair Lady, and The King And I were created before the current trend in special effects, and shows like those will continue to be put on at Gateway Playhouse. Shows like Titanic, however, require something the classics don't: more power. "A touring show could need 2000 amps of power to run the stage lights, motors, lifts, hydraulics, fiberoptics, it is all very high tech and very power-driven. When Grandpa built the theater in 1962 he put in what was then adequate power and we have upgraded it several times but there is only so much available on the street, explained Allan. Substantial power was installed in Patchague during the first phase of renovation last year, in an attempt to foresee future requirements. Backstage space is also a new requirement since sets weigh thousands of pounds and casts number in the dozens, so a two story addition is being built at Patchague for dressing rooms and green rooms. "For example, if you have a show like Riverdance, with 60 people in it, those people need to go somewhere when they are not on stage, not to mention their technical crews," explained Allan.

Titanic, featuring a bridge and a crow's nest in its multilevel set, requires a taller proscenium as well. "In Bellport, we have 15 feet, so an actor can't be standing more than eight feet off the ground if you are to see his head. In Patchogue, with 23 feet, the man can really look like he's up there, the set looks more in perspective," Allan said

"Bellport is a more intimate setting, the seats are closer to the stage, and it is more suitable for shows which would only get lost in a big theater like Patchague," continued Allan. "Having the two theaters gives patrons many more choices.

Spotlight on SET DESIGN

et design is equal parts artistic inspiration and technical feasibility. It must both realize the director's vision for the play as well as physically work in the theater space, and remain under budget! Set designers like Titanic's Brodie Alan Steele begin with the basic requirements - how much money are they working with, what is the stage like, what does the show need from the set? "I read the show through first," said Steele, "marking it for entrances, exits, and anything else required in the text." Steele also designs the props, which are either bought, or if they are uncommon or specialized pieces, built.

"First, I draft a sketch, which I will always prefer to do by hand," explained Steele, although he has used computers to generate elevations. He works with the director to be sure the concept for the show is captured, then elevations are made giving the exact measurements of the set. "Early in the process there are production meetings with the other designers," said Steele, "so I work with the lighting designer at this point as well." Finally, Steele constructs a miniature of the set, "This helps the actors to see what they will be working with, in three dimensions," he explained, "and is useful for matching colors when we paint the full scale set."

For a show like Gateway's production of 1776, Steele had to create the interior of Philadelphia's Independence Hall, suggest its exterior, and come up with period desks, chairs, inkwells, quill pens, and other props evocative of 18th Century writers. But for a show like Titanic, as Steele said, "you have to sink the boat. You can't just tell the audience it happened." The resulting set for Titanic is the most complicated set that Gateway Playhouse has ever used. The Broadway set for Titanic featured hydraulics beneath the stage floor which lifted the set. Besides being expensive, this permanent structure would not be feasible for a three week run. Instead, Steele has designed a two-story 19 foot high set featuring a crow's nest, bridge, and deck which can be raised 14 feet in the air with chain motors. Grooves are cut into the deck, so that props can slide across the slanted surface without falling every which way, which could injure an actor. Add to this the fact that RMS Titanic sailed in 1912, so props and paint must be reminiscent of the period. The set was built at Gateway Playhouse's workshop in Bellport, then trucked in pieces to Patchogue where it was assembled. One of the most recent stages of renovation at the Patchoque Theater for the Performing Arts was the removal of a large portion of wall from the east side of the building and an addition built to create more wing space for the set which is 40 feet long and features a pool beneath for the crucial last scene. "We had to have it specially made," said Steele, "we hired a pool manufacturer to make us a 40x16 foot pool...which is only three inches deep."

Steele has worked as Technical Director on many shows across the country, but set designing is his first love. "I feel that is where my true creativity can come out," he said.

Theatre Etiquette

A performance at Gateway Playhouse can be a truly uplifting experience for all of our patrons and for the performers as well. Following are some tips that will maximize everyone's enjoyment.

We were here, where were you?

Arriving late to the theatre is never considered "fashionably late." Please arrive before the scheduled curtain time to allow time to park and get to your seats before the show begins. After the performance or overture has begun, latecomers will be asked to wait until a suitable moment before being seated. The same reminder applies at intermission, so don't "dawdle."

Is this seat taken?

Please sit only in your assigned seats and remove any hats or accessories that may interfere with the vision of the person sitting behind you.

Talking & humming

Please don't. Kindly refrain from talking. humming or singing along during the show so as not to disturb your neighbors.

Hearina a pin drop

Just as you mentally leave your earthly boundaries and are transported to another place and time, becoming one with the performers, SUDDENLY, your neighbor starts beeping or unwrapping a candy. Watches, cellular phones and beepers are distracting and annoying to everyone. We ask that all such devices be left in the car or turned off upon your entry into the theatre. And why not pop that candy into your mouth before the show starts?

Runnina Ovations

A quick departure is noticed by everyone in the audience, and especially by the performers on stage. You've invested considerable time and energy in getting to the theatre. Why ruin the experience for those around you in an effort to save a few minutes getting to your car? The performers can see you, so please wait until the house lights come up.

We sincerely hope this will help you and those around you have a more fulfilling theatre-going experience. Enjoy!
